Gun injuries are the leading cause of death for children and teens ages 1-17 in the United States, surpassing car crashes for the first time in two decades.

While many people think that gun violence is a divisive topic with no common ground or agreement, the good news is that we actually agree on more than we think. From parents, gun owners, non-gun owners, gun violence survivors, health care professionals and more, we agree that gun injuries shouldn't be the leading cause of death for children and teens.

We all have a role to play, and having productive conversations with others about gun violence - such as asking about unlocked guns in the home before a playdate - can help protect children and teens. Let's use the common ground we share and work together to make our homes and communities safer for kids.
